Advanced Skills On Financial Model

Course Description:

A financial model is simply a tool that creates a summary of a company's expenditures and revenues in the form of a spreadsheet that is used to forecast the company's financial performance in the future. The forecast is typically done on the basis of the company's previous performance, anticipation about the future, and requires preparing an income statement, balance sheet, and cash flow statement. From there, more advanced types of models can be built such as discounted cash flow analysis, leveraged- buyout, mergers and acquisition, and sensitivity analysis. Financial analysts mostly use the financial model to analyze and anticipate how a company's stock performance might be altered by future events or executive decisions. Besides, company executives usually use them to calculate the expenses and profits of a proposed upcoming project. Financial models are widely used in strategic planning to estimate the valuation of a business or to compare businesses to their peers in the industry. This course will help you to understand the financial model more clearly and execute operations.
